PROGRAM SUMMARY:

Artificial intelligence, or AI, has seen a recent surge in use across a wide variety of industries. Anyone who has used Google or Amazon has been subject to one of the more popular uses of AI in the customized advertising. Another popular use of AI is image processing, which has seen an increased use in intelligence gathering and other security applications. Deep learning, a subset of AI, is particularly useful in image processing.

Deep learning algorithms use neural networking to process enormous data sets in order to carry out a desired task. For example, Japanese researchers used images of healthy tissue and cancerous tissue to teach a computer to detect early stage cancer using a deep learning algorithm. The computer detected cancerous tissue successfully about 80 percent of the time, which is comparable to a standard medical diagnosis.

Even beyond its security and medical applications, it is easy to see how deep learning could be applied to industrial vision systems. In very simple terms, a deep learning algorithm could automate quality control by learning what a “good” part looks like, and rejecting the rest. More broadly, deep learning algorithms could be used to learn what part of the manufacturing process causes a set of defects. The algorithm could then adjust the process and remove the defect from subsequent parts on the fly.

A simple example of process improvement is cookie baking. The deep learning algorithm could learn what a perfect cookie is, what a burned cookie is, and what an under-cooked cookie is. By actively monitoring the cookie batches using a vision system, the algorithm would be able to adjust the oven temperature as the cookies were moving through the process, saving time and money on bad batches.

The applications of deep learning are almost limitless with machine vision system. The ability of AI to process images is a well documented use of the technology, and most manufacturers have large databases of past material that could easily be used by deep learning algorithms for initial learning. Once the algorithm has learned, it can be maintained and adjusted over time just like any other piece of industrial equipment.

Remarks of the programmer:

The webinar was successfully organized on 25.06.2020 by the Department of Mechanical Engineering, SVCE. This webinar was coordinated by Dr. S Gopinath Prof/MEC, Dr M Mohandass ASP/MEC and Mr. A.Kumarasamy AP/MEC. The resource person Dr KIRAN KUMAR KUDUMULA, Assistant Professor, IIIT BASAR, Telangana, presented the webinar after the inaugural speech by Head of the Department, Dr. S. Ramesh Babu. The speaker covered the Deep learning principles in Machine Vision with in depth with various case studies. The speaker had also extensively presented the application of Deep Learning with a case study. In this event, there are around 750 enthusiastic participants from across India. All the participants who had attended the event and given the feedback were issued with E-certificate.

Python for machine vision applications

Python provides lots of libraries for image processing including -

- OpenCV- Image processing library mainly focused on real-time computer vision with application in widerange of areas like 2D and 3D feature toolkits, facial & gesture recognition, Human-computer interaction, Mobile robotics, Object identification and others.
- NumPy- It is one of the core libraries in Python programming and provides support for arrays. An image is essentially a standard NumPy array containing pixels of data points (especially for noise filtering, masking etc..)
- SciPy- It is another of Python's core scientific modules (like NumPy) and can be used for basic image manipulation and processing tasks (filters can be applied comparably like gaussian filters..)
- PIL/Pillow- It is a free library for the Python programming language that adds support for opening, manipulating, and saving many different image file formats (image filtering and enhancement etc..)
- SkImage- It Provides lots of algorithms for image processing (especially image filtering, template matching etc.).
- wikit-Image- It is an open source Python package that works with Numpy arrays. It implements algorithms and utilities for use in research, education, and industry applications.
- SimpleCV- It is another open source framework for building computer vision applications. It offers access to several high-powered computer vision libraries such as OpenCV, but without having to know about bit depths, file formats & color spaces.
- Pgmagick- It is a Python-based wrapper for the GraphicsMagick library. It provides a robust and efficient collection of tools and libraries which support reading, writing and manipulating an image in over 88 major formats. (image scaling, edge extraction)
- @calro- Pycairo is a set of python bindings for the graphics library cairo is a 2D graphics library for drawing vector graphics used for drawing drawing lines, basic shapes and radial gradients.
